Design Specifications: Andrew Jackson, America's seventh president shut down the last central bank in the United States and also was the only President in history to ever pay off the national debt.. He is commemorated on this medallion for his most important stand, defeating the central bank. Jackson's familiar visage and dates of his life are on the obverse and an image inspired by a classic statue of the President on horseback is on the reverse along with his immortal promise to the central bankers of his day, "by eternal God I will rout you out." And rout them out he did. Below his image is the date (1913) of the founding of our current central bank, the Federal Reserve.

Marketing Target: Anyone familiar with the threat posed by private central banking interests will appreciate this unique medallion. It is commissioned by Republic Trading Group for use in sales through the Republic Broadcasting Network.
